The village lass to rustic lover wed, With timid joy regards the nuptial bed, While crimson tinges deck her lovely face First shrinks from then meets the fond embrace So now my muse unus'd to scenes like this. With fear and pleasure feels your courting kiss She yields-is yours-obeys your friendly call : Your smile, or censure bids her stand or fall-

Beauty, wealth, and pleasure leave behind? Can future time yield blessings like the past? Doubt not, inquirer, fortune will be kind.

Elate with hope, not groundless, nought I fear Fame, with honour join'd, a noble guide, Gives certain promise of a bless'd career Justice, from all, with woman's fond regard, Knowledge, increasing, competence and health Leave me but these. I'll count not fortune hard.

Not rich, not servile, but with manly pride Of temp'rate pleasure I'll partake my fill. Puor vet honest, who will dare deride?

Reason at helm direct my bark in peace, Secure from ill. I'll shun all needless strife. 'Till nature's parent bids existence cease.

Vice and envy shall rejoice alone-Why do I pause? Why falls the pearly tear? Xerxes's thoughts on frailty are my own.

Could that affection be unfeign'd, When ev'ry solemn vow was broke, And rapture to indifference chang'd, For-one short word in anger spoke?

No, Henry! 'twas a transient glow That burn'd within thy fickle or all! false Youth, too well I know,

SONG-Tune, " Love has Eyes."

My Love's away,
To sea, they say,
Pate decreed we must part;
Though absent far,
'Mid toils of war,

Hope whispers to my heart, Though distant on the stormy main, she soltly says, we'll meet again.

Love ever there will rest;
And, still through all my grief and pain,
Hope tells me, we will meet again.

Moral and Beligious.

"O! ton to victue, lost to manly thought, Lost to nothe sallies of the soul! Who think it solitude to be alone."

Cheerless and comfortless must be the life of that erson who dreads to be alone who prefers the most friendous and insipid amusement, to calm and sober reflection. It has been deemed somewhat extraordinary that mankind in general know so little of themselves—that every person is more blind to his own failings, than to those of his neighthis, however, will not be found very remarkable, when it is considered, that most men seek an acquaintance with every body else rather than elves. We willingly pass an hour in conversation with a neighbor-we scrutinize his character and conduct-we notice all his errors, his blemishes, his weaknesses; and we do not hesitate to suggest a mode of reformation. But how seldom do we bestow this trouble on ourselves-How loth are we to pass even a moment in solitude. How unwilling are we to search into our own hearts. With what reluctance do we observe our own frailties and follies; and how slow, how criminally negligent are we in reforming ourselves Man loves himself better than any body else; and yet there is no one whose company he so much

How long must unhappy mortals continue to put on the weed of mourning, for the loss of friends !the sable garb and melancholy countenances which continually meet our view in the assemblies of the living, wound the feelings of sympathy, and tell us this mournful truth, that the Grave is the end of all. In vain do we attempt to shun its dark and damp name, and the sportive child, must die. The youth, flushed with the bloom of spring, and rejoicing in health, suddenly droops, and falls in silence. Middle age dies like corn in summer. Old age is like the ripe and bending corn-has but a short way to fall-and dying, speaks the decay of nature. Disease, famine, and the sword-Time's Execution ers-like wolves upon the watch, wait the unhappy victim at every corner, and he escapes one on ly to fall a prey to the other. To the trembling wretch, whose brow is blackened with the consciousness of crime, they come armed with tenfold terrors; but to the man of truth, like indifferent visitors, they are admitted, and he feels nothing but the inevitable blow.

MY NEIGHBOUR.

MY NEIGHBOUR.

I am a man possessed of a pretty competent fortune, with a wife and several children, and by my industry, taking care to observe a pruper medium between extravagance and parsimony, I have been enabled to keep up a respectable and genetic proposite aisle drew my attention. The opposite aisle drew my attention. The most pleasant and fashionable parts of the city. Next door to me, on the one side, is a Boarding-House of the first standing, the mistress of which, a middle aged bustling sort of a woman, for want of proper management, (I know not what clese, is continually borrowing something or other, such as spoons, glasses, china, chairs, &c.—Nor is it only now and then, for if it were! should not complain, but it is repeated almost every day. Oftentimes are we put to the most acrious inconvenience by this means—you shall judge. A short time ago, a servant was dispatched into my hause, with Mrs. Botherin's compliments, who requested the loan of a number of wine glasses a to many, however, that it left our family with that three, she having had a considerable increase of boarders that day I was for flatly refusing such an unreasonable demand, but my wife, (who is, without flatiery, one of the best of "women-kind," and withal of such a gentle disposition as would lead over yellow the disposition as would lead over the grade as possible. But as ill luck would have it, immediate the produced here included by the man whose agoney the lower story is all stallers and not only forbidden their union, but had every thing that the went thing casential.

As the venerable priest pronounced the sendiction, a convulsive groan from the benediction. The mournal not many attention. The population is grained in industrial, in the convenience of the effect when the most pleasant of the treet of the poor Bride, who, after easing a hasty glance in the disposition are groan leaf the convenience of the population is calulated and when the convenience of the strength of the remarkable of the population is calulated at one h diately after, several friends of mine happened to drop in, and it being nearly our dining hour, I invited them to stay, which they politely arrest to. We sat down—the cloth was removed, and there stood the three glasses full in view—I had hoped that my wife, although it would have been a painful task to her, had sent in to reclaim those which our neighbour had herewed—but in this which our neighbour had herewed—but in this hoped that my wife, although it would have been a painful task to her, had sent in to reclaim those which our neighbour but his barrowed—but in this I was mistaken. There was seven of us at table, and of course we could not all be supplied from the few glasses which were remaining—in this discusse, as thought suggested itself that some of them might possibly decline drinking—Mr Suchaone, (said I, mentioning his name.) shall I have the pleasure of taking a glass of wine with you-no great pleasure, thinks I to myself—"Certainly," replied he, and immediately filled. Hope still cling to me, perhaps the others will not choose any, and all might yet be well—I addressed them generally, wishing by that maneuvre to escape, "Gentlemen, will none of you take some wine"—but here again I had reason to find fault with Mrs. Botherim, for they all undesitatingly complied with my invitation, and I was compelled to make an apology, by sating the case to them, when they very good lussouredly agreed to use tumblers. Now, could say thing be more provoking than this. Metishs I hear some sympathetic souls advising m to remove—to quit an elegant mansion, delighfully situated, on which I have bestowed numbriess improvements, for the sake of ridding mysilf of such a troublesome acquaintance. O rempte I o move! The difficulties attending such a change would counter-balance the benefits I might derive from it.

As I was loth to say any thing to Mrs. Botherim, I could think of no better plan than publishing the above in your entertaining paper, which I know she will get a sight of, and must be blind indeed if she does not apply it to herself.

[For the Saturday Evening Post.] THE VILLAGE BRIDAL.

"The kirk is deck'd at morning tide, "The tapers glimmer fair;
"The Priest and Bridegroom wait the bride,
"And dame and knight are there."—

The first glance of the morning had tipped with gold the loftiest trees of the forest the glittering foliage quivered in the sunbeam, the far off tolling from the parish church hung listlessly on the ear, and all nature appeared sunk in the vacant indoence so peculiar to a summer morning in our " country of the sun." As I strolled languidly up the little val ey, in the bosom of which, hardly discernible from the density of the grove by which it was surrounded, stood the church, sometimes pausing to listen to the melody of the lark, who, perched upon a tree, carroll'd blithely to the rising sun. The notes reverberated along the valley and filled it with pie music, occasionally interrupted by the melancholy scream of the bittern, who flew far over us bending his solitary course to his mountain home, until the pale fac'd moon, the queen of night, should again resume her empire in the heavens.

The God of the harvest had shed his blessings upon the land, the field groaned beneath the waving grain, and the fruit tree bent under its load.

On entering the church, I conjectured, from the flowers with which the altar was fancifully ornamented, that a marriage was to be solemnized-nor was the idea erroneous, for the party now were approaching.

The Bride, a beautiful young lady of eighteen years, was led by her father to the foot of the altar-A wreath of roses, interningled with lilies, were entwined in her auburn hair, which lay on her ivory neck in rich ringlets, while the expression of her dour of the scene. The pallid hue of care was there, and her swoln eye-lids appeared to a gentleman in Kentucky, by his brother, dated the 8th of January, 1822 hardly capable of repressing the tears which struggled for a passage. My heart rose to three hundred miles. The main road leading from my lips at the sight of the "lamb led to the sacrifice."

At this moment the Bridegroom appeared-his age could not have been under fifty. and his countenance betrayed the existence within him of every passion calculated to chill the warm heart of a susceptible girl. A physiognomist would read legibly engraven there, irritability, avarice, jealousy. But he was rich-the lady was in poverty, and her father believed gold to be the only dotard who courted her acceptance.—

The evening after the ceremony Adolph auddenly disappeared, and I prosecuted my journey.

Scarcely a twelvementh had elapsed ere my vagrant disposition led me again to the same village. Again Ceres waved her golden arms o'er the fertile earth, and again the dull lengthened chime from the church summoned me thither. But how differently the peal broke upon the ear—before, it was the tolling of joy and revelry; it was now the knell which ushered a fellow being to the tomb—It was the funeral of the lady whose marriage I had witnessed under the same roof. She had meekly submitted to the commands of her parent, and wedded the object of her detestation.—Broken hearted at the loss of her lover, the work of despair had revelled in her heart, and she gladly hailed the harbinger of dissolution.—The coffin rested on the foot of the alter where I had seen her kneeling—and her father, writhing under the punishment of his own reflections, learned against the very pillar which had supported Adolph.

As the coffin was consigned to the earth, a door on the opposite side of the building flew open, and a man rushed wildly up the aisle, and gazing convulsively for a moment in the grave, precipitated himself into it. He was taken to the village, and every attention, put life was prepared to it. What opasituded to the grave, precipitated himself into it. He was taken to the village, and every attention, put life was prepared to it. What opasituded him had a large of our present in the grave, precipitated himself into it. He was taken to the village, and every attentions paid him, but in voin.—He expired

He was taken to the village, and every attention paid him, but in yoin-He expired the same evening, and was buried in the grave of his Amelia. It was Adolph.

RAYMOND.

[For the Saturday Evening Post.] THE BRIEF REMARKER.

THE BRIEF REMARKER.

To a mind delighting to dwell upon the rapid dissemination of knowledge, and to trace its effects upon the most powerful nations, none afford so ample a field as Americas, that happy country destined by an all-wise Providence, for or ise preeminently great, and with all the majesty of Romato celebrate within herself, things the most important and useful. Look back but a few centuries, and admire the pleasing contrast. Then the wild beasts of the forest roved unrestrained—then, those fair streams whose ports now filled with slips, were alone navigated by the Indian's canor. Instead of the busy hum of civilizedarts reverberating from the shores, there was fought but the piercing yell of triumphing barbarians. Who could satisfipate so wonderful a change! May we not truly exclaim, "the ways of Providence are unsearchable and replete with wisdom?" What now presents itself to the admiring spectator? A country in the highest state of civilization—refined nearly in the same degree of manners and customs with that from which the inhabitants of this nation emanated. Literature is fast disseminating its enlightening beams over its surface. Genius has already given sufficient demonstrations of its abode among our countrymen. The specimens of mechanic arts exhibited to the world, have brought forth the humiliating confession from British Reviewers, that in this department America stands rival to England. Under such happy auspices of future renown, why need we heed the foul aspersions, foreigners have cast upon it? Sacrificing every jealons idea of our prosperity at the shrine of truth and justice, they represent us, as hut just emerging from a state of barbarism. Prejudiced perhaps, from their infancy against three "rebel provinces," as they tern them, they come out here as faithfullethroniclers of our manners and customs. This is no hypothesis. It is what will customs. out here as faithfullchroniclers of our manners and out here as faithful chrometers of our manners and customs. This is no hypothesis. It is what will be seen in their "travels."—We show it to be false; and we are assured that if the productions of Literature and Art meet with sufficient encou-ragement. Americans will in a short time justify the predictions of its future importance.

A PEEP AT MEXICO.

one of these cities to the other is the best I ever travelled, although the country through which it passes is the most mountainous I ever beheld.—

travelled, although the country through which it passes is the most mountainous I ever beheld.—
Mexico is surrounded by mountains, some of which are covered with anow all the year; they afford a grand and splendid prospect from the city, where gardens are covered with flowers and other vegetable productions at all seasons of the year. I have ate ripe peaches in the morning at the foot of a mountain, and in the evening, after having passed the mountain, have seen orchards in bloom.
This country produces all the fruits of the West Indies, as well as those of North America; the apple comes to great perfection; the watermelon may be had every day in the year; petatoes, and in fact every thing that man can wish for, may be produced here, though the inhabitants live wretchedly; the city is filled with poor; you are attacked at every corner of the street by heggars—a large number of whom are able to work, but have been raised in indolence, and can do nothing except ride or back a mule, which is their only mode of trans-discussion, and who with the slightest predupos-tion of judgment can attach to it any other mean-ing than the literal sense I have taken it in. In the plenitude of his discernment he has thought fit to arraign my wilful ignorance in perverting its sense, but again he most ungenerously refuses to give the least satisfaction on the subject. Leaving infinitely more room for surmises as to what might have been his intended meaning, than opportuni-ties to censure me for subverting it. This is a miserable subterfuge from common sense or rea-miserable subterfuge from common sense or rea-ties to censure me for subverting it. This is a minerable subterfuge from common sense or reason, and is unmanly and unfair.

It occurs to me, gentlemen, that I did not speak of "the transitory applause of a few friends" nor any thing to that purport: where is the justice in an assertion of this kind so unsupported by truth. It is true I did speak of the unit versal approbation of the house and the consequent hopes of success to be anticipated from such manifestation of good feeling; and I will be nardy emough again to reacest, that as such they were as sure testimonies in his favour, as any ming your correspondent could say to endeavour to prove the contrary.

I am accused of partiality in my opinion, an accusation that moves me 'not a jot,' but one which your underson correspondent can not be allowed to have the slightest reason to substantiate; and which was still very unnecessary as it could prove nothing on either side; what follows leaves me abundant reason to tax him on the score of his modesty and diffidence—he, forsooth, has had opportunities of judging of oratory, and unhestiating-leaved to the still of indeping it in others; with the deliver of indeping it in others; when portunities of judging of oratory, and unhesitating-ly denies the talent of judging it in others: with all due deference to his discrimination, I think I may be allowed to put my judgment in competi-tion with his, without outraging is any sense the modesty of comparison. His assuming a superior rits over me in this way does his modesty and my penetration little credit—it may impeach my judg-ment, but it certainly is not the less free from arment, but it certainly is not the less tree from a rogance in him.

"The appliance of a few friends," " and the mois rabble ever ready to graify their elamourous propensities," ergo, all those that were unfortunate enough not to be included in the number of one friends, are obliged to come under the complimentary phrase of the "noisy rabble!" For the sake of justice, gentlemen, I would sope that this had never been penued, as by it the sewercas signal is most unequivocally stamped on those that it were the vikest slander to apply to individually; and certainly of whose approbation and appliance may a Votary of Thespis would be proud, and whose cenaire or commendation is as often an undeniable testimony of worth or its opposite, as the most laboured efforts of critical sagnetty or taste. My knowledge of Latin is an limited as my use of it, and I boast not of perfection in either-my con-solution shall be that I know sufficient of the Eng-lish language to counteract the ill effects of its misupplication in others.

Gentlemen. I have done, and I shall now close this involuntary, but very necessary trespass on your readers—unprofitable as this discussion may be, it is nevertheless a duty I owe myself, and which it would be a misfortune I should ever negicet to would be a misfortune I should ever neglect to render, where such strong necessity definands it methe cud of my displeasure is long since digerted, to continue a metaphor at best but a pisc one: eithat the effect on others may be truly saintary is my wish—and of the means I have taken to make it so, you can now judge. In the universal language of Shakspeare, before retiring I can only say to your Yotary of Thespise with all the quainle cation of peace and good feeling, "Go on, I'll follow thee!"

An old eastern tradition ways, that while Adam and Eve were in the happy garden, there was sent down to them a present, consisting of twelve bas-kets fitled with chit chat, and that the baskets being emptied, the contents were scattered about the garden. It happened in the mean time that Adam, being rather in a pensive thoughtful mood, Adam, being rather in a pensive thoughtful mood, paid less attention to this present than his particle did, so that he gathered but only three haskets full, while Evenimbly collected, and carefully laid away for her use the other nine. The natural consequence was that the stock of small talk, which woman have, is in comparison with that of men, against technique.

Commerce, like Rengion, is viewed by many only through the medium of its abuses. In alt its legitimate operations it is the promoter of peace, of liberty and of civilization. While it supplies the conveniencies and insuries of life, it makes the people of one country acquisited with those of another, and wears away those national prejudices which are too often the cause of jealousy and war. In addition to this it creates an extensive and powerful interest in favour of peace. All commercial countries are reciprocally customers to each other, and he is a poor calculator who does not study to be on friendly terms with his customers.

Shipwreck of the Albion Packet. Ship wreck of the Albion Packet.
We have to record (says a Liverpool paper.) as melanoboly event, in the loss of the packet ship Albion, from Rew-York to Liverpool. This line vessel sailed from New York on the 1st April, with a crew of 24 men and about 28 passengers. On the 22d inst. she was entirely jost on the coast of Ireland, off Garrestown, near the Old Point of Ki-sale. Only two passengers and seven of the crew were saved. All the particulars of this melancholy shipwreck which have been received in town up to the hour that we are writing, are contained in two letters published in the Mercury yesterday, and which we give beneath, the one from lerday, and which we give beneath, the one from Jacob Mark, U.S. Consul at Kinsale, to Mesar Cropper, Benson and Co. of this town; the other from an eye-witness of the scene, a Mr. Purcell, agent of the gentleman to whom the letter is addressed, and which had been forwarded here by this gentleman, for the information of those in-

On my arrival at this place, early this morning, I was informed of the melancholy fate of the Albion, Capt. Williams, one of the line of packet ships from N. York to your port: she was cast away before daylight this morning, to the westward of the Old Head, near s place called Garrestown, and I " Kinsale, 4th Month 22, 1822. grieve to say, poor Capt. Williams is no more.— There were 22 passengers on board, in the cabin 15 men and 7 women, all of whom have met a wa tery grave, with the exception of one young man from Boston; and he is so exhausted, that he could not give the names of the others, or any particu-lars; seven of the crew are saved, one of the mates and six men. I am informed that there was a con-siderable sum in specie on board; part of the deck and six men. I am informed that there was a considerable sum in specie on board; part of the deck only floated ashore. [ANOTHER LETTER.]

"Honored Sir—Some time before 4 o'clock this morning, I was informed that a ship was cast away on the rocks at the bottom of your dairy farms, to which place I immediately repaired, and at about the centre of the two farms found a vessel on the the centre of the two farms found a vessel on the rocks, under a very high cliff. At this time, as it blew a dreadful gale, with spring tide and approaching high water, the sea ran apountains high; however, I descended with some men as far down the cliff as the dashing of the sea would permit us to go with safety, and there had the horrid spectacle of viewing five dead bodies attacked and the cliff. to go with safety, and there had the horrid specta-cle of viewing five dead bodies atretched on the deck, and four other fellow creatures distractedly catting for assistance, which we were unable to af-ford them, as certain death would have attended the attempt to render them any. Of those in this perilous situation, one was a female, whom, though it was impossible from the wind and the roaring of the sea to hear her, yet from her gestures, and the stretching out of her hands, we judged to be calling and imploring for our assistance. At this time the greater part of the vessel lay on a rock, and part of the stern, where this poor woman lay, and part of the stern, where this poor woman lay, projected over a narrow creek, that divides this rock from another. Here the sea ran over her with the greatest fury, yet she kept a firm hold, which it much astonished me that she could do; but we soon perceived that the vessel was broke across, where she projected over the rock, and af across, where she projected over the rock, and after many waves dashing against her, this part of the vessel rolled into the waves, and he had the heart rending misfortune of seeing the woman perish. The three men lay towards the stern of the vessel, one of whom stuck to a mast, which reviewed toward the cliff, he whom after many the vessel, one of whom stuck to a mast, which projected toward the cliff, to whom, after many attempts, we succeeded in throwing a rope, and brought him safe ashore. Another we also saved, but the constant dashing of the waves put an end to the sufferings of the others. This vessel proves to be the Albion packet, of N. York, Capt. Williams, which place she left on the 1st inst for Liverpool, with a cargo of cotton, raw turpentine, &c. and with about 28 passengers. Her crew consisted of 24; and of the whole, there have been saved only 24; and of the whole, there have been saved only once, making the sufferers amount to 43. Out of the passengers there have been saved but two.—
The backes of five men and two women have been picked up. After doing every thing possible for these poor creatures, I exerted myself with Mr. Gibbons in saving the private property of the poor sailors and passengers, and succeeded in saving some of their trunks. I have brought four of these poor creatures here, Mr. Gibbons has taken three, and two more remain at the dairyments. two more remain at the dairymen's houses from whence they were too weak to be removed Capt Williams is among the sufferers. As I know your feelings towards those thus situated, I have taken the liberty of preparing some thin boards, to make coffina for these seven. She is now com-pletely gone to pieces. She was, I think, as fine a vessel of her description as could be seen. My tuation does not allow me say any more at pre nt, as I was never more fatigued, and "Hemain, honored sir,

"Giry, I o'clock.—We were favoured with the perusal of letters received this morning from St. Petersburgh, dated 1st inst. from Odessa 29th, and from Constantinople the 23d ult. Their contents are of much imposance. The negociations continued at Constantinople up to the 2d, with every prospect of an arricable adjustment of the differences. On the 2th of March, the English Cansul at Odessa foresteded an impostant destand Consul at Odessa forwarded an important des-patch from Lord Stranford to Petersburgh; and on the 23d the merchants at Constantinople were informed that the Austran minister had dispatche to forward, and that the post would be sent off a 8 o'clock in the evening in place of midnight, the usual hour. These leters mention an engagement between the Turkish and Greek fleets in Patras Bay. The former are, in one account, repre-sented to be completely successful. The Turkish government gave out that the Greek fleet was en tirely destroyed; but another letter says only seven vessels were captured out of 71. The engagement was seen by the Rose sloop of war, the officers of which say, the Turkish vessels were fought with great gallantry. There was much buttle. fought with great gallantry. There was much bustle at Constantinople in getting vessels fitted out to cope with the Greeks; six sail of the line, seven frigates, and a great number of small vessels, were nearly ready for sea. From St. Petersburgh, the accounts are entirely of a pacific character. The exchange was still rising, and no person expected war. Some insubordination in the Russian army is stated to have taken place; four soldiers are reported to be sent off to Siberia."

We have received this marning German papers to the 17th instant, and copy from the Frankfort Journal the following remarkable article, which appeared in the Austrian Observer, our readers are probably aware, is considered as the official paper of the Austrian Government, and during the last two or three weeks it has maintained a studied silence upon the subject of the affairs of Turkey and Russia, which has excited the peculiar motice, and called forth the conjectures of continental politicians. At length, however, it speaks out, and in reference to its official character, what it says deserves much consideration, though it is somewhat obscurely delivered. After exposing the machinery of news-making, as practised by our foreign contemporaries, and not wholly unknown, we suspect, to some of our native ones, it concludes with the following remarkable declaration:—"We are formally authorized to declare that the reports which have been circulated for some weeks past in public papers, on the state of the negociations with the Foters, are either entirely some weeks past in public papers, on the state of the negociations with the Porte, are either entirely fulse, or mixed up with data partly true and partly false, so that they do not merit any credit whatever question was to know whether the deance of its demands would alone be satisfactory. The Sultan heard the deliberations in this impo-tant sitting, concealed behind the curtain of window opening from his cabinet into the council room. All the great men and Viziers of the Porte similar invitation was sent to the chiefs of the Ja

red that the question of peace or war was to be decided. (Here follows a list of many of the great officers of state, &c. who were present.)
The Multi and chiefs of the Ulemas having de clared that several of the demands of the Musco vites were contrary to the principles of Ismalism, and to the dignity of religion, the Grand Vizier, as President of the Divan, proposed the following "Is it just and conformable to the principles of the Holy Koran to raise the standard of the Great Prophet, and call to arms the Mussulmen of the East and of the West, when demands like these indicated are addressed to the Prince of the Fath-ful?" On which the Muhi said, "Yes, it is just." These words were immediately repeated by Ulemas. The following question was next proposed:—" Is it just and wise to withdraw the Mussulmen from the Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, while the Moscovites have assembled on the frontiers a numerous corps, which they will not dissolve?" To which all those present answered unanimously, 'No; that would not be just, it would not be wise,' The following questions were then discussed: * Can the administration of the two frontier pro vinces be estrusted in future, as it has hithe been, either to the perfidious and traitore Greeks or Boyars!"—The answer was unanimo y, 'No, that is impossible '-' Can we restore to he rebellious Rajahs all their churches and their the rebellious Kajahs all their churches and their privileges so long as they obstinately persist in their disobedience to the Sublime Porte? 'No, that cannot be.' The Sultan approved of all these decisions, and give orders to the Grand Vizier to cause his intentions to be notified by the Reis Etfendi to the Foreign Ambassadors, and to explain to them at the same time the reasons which had induced the Porte to take such a resolution.

We presume this death is a new example of the phenomenon called " spontaneous human combustion." This woman, who was corpulent, was according to report, in the habit of using spiritous liquors imprudently. A vase standing near her filled with burning coals, deter-mined the inflammation of her body. She was burnt to a cinder inwardly. The extremities were not affected. The room and her clothing also escaped the fire. There are on record instances of internal combustion, but they are few, and the majority of these were occasioned by an excessive

Capt. Thompson, of the sloop Jay, arrived at N. York from Gibara, (Cuba) furnishes the following

The Jay sailed from New York on the 19th of Pebruary, bound to Principe. On the 6th of March carried away the head of the foremast, and put into Gibara to repair—proceeded thence on the 21st, and next day at 8 A. M. saw a schr. standing for us, a little to windward of Neuvitas. At 10, she fired a gun and hoisted Spanish colours—find ing it impossible to escape, we have to, when she ing it impossible to escape, we have to, when sine ran along under our quarter, hailed, and ordered me on board with my papers. I went on board the pirate with two men, when they manned my boat with four men, and sent them on board the Jay, where they ordered the crew into the forecastle, and stood in for the land. The captain of the pirate began to question me respecting the cargo, to whom it belonged, &c. but I gave him no direct answer. He said he knew what was on board as well as I did—that he had friends at Gibara, who obtained the information for him—that the cargo belonged to Capt. Driggs, and if he could catch him he would hang him, but he would not hurt us, the cargo being all that he wanted.' At 12, they brought the sloop to anchor inside the reef to the westward of Neuvitas, and hauled their schoone westward of Neuvitas, and hauted their schooner alongside. They then ordered us all into the forecastle, except the boy, and placed a guard over it. They then commenced loading their schooner with our cargo, threatening the boy if he did not tell where the money and valuables were concealed they would kill him. After loading the achr. which captured us, they hauted another alongside and loaded her also, pilips them 4 or 5 feet warm dock.

captured us, they hauled another alongside and coaded her also, piling them 4 or 5 feet upon deck.

At half past four, the boy opened the forecastle and told us the pirates had gone. On coming upon deck, we saw the two schooners about three quar ters of a mile from us, one towing the other. Our deck was strewed with broken boxes, soap, bot ties, &c. They had taken from the cabin all our clothing, beds and beddling, watches, charts, and every thing that was in it, including the vessels papers, log book, &c. torn up the floor and broke most of the furniture. They took most of the cargo from the hold, and broke and injured what they left. They had taken from the cabin all out

Captain Driggs, of the schooner Abigail, of this port, then lying at Gibara, hearing of the circumstance of my being captured, immediately fitted out his schooner to go in quest of the pirates, and bired men to go by land and cut off their retreat.

On my arrival at Gibara, I had the satisfaction to find that the men who were dispatched by land succeeded in taking them, and that the villains were then in prison. It was also ascertained they were the same who had captured the English schr. Sea Plower, twice, and robbed her in the same manner they did me. On the 17th of April, Capt. Briggs returned to Gibara, in company with the U. S. schr. Alligator. Capt. Stockton then went to the expense of taking all my crew to town, nine leagues, to have our depositions taken.

On going to the jail, we, with the crew of the English schooner, were ordered into a room, and brought out separately to identify the prisoners.—They were mixed in with a number of others, but every one of us agreed in selecting and swearing to those who robbed us. We found some of our clothes upon them, which, however, the governor refused to restore to us.

After all our depositions were taken, the judge said, if we were not there at the trial, which would Independent of the want of scenery, costume, and decorations, we venture to say the play of Virginius is one of the least calculated to display Virginius is one of the least calculated to display to advantage the talents of the corps, which we think decidedly comic. Mr. Hutton's conception of Virginius was no less vigorous and correct than we were led to expect, from an actor of sound judgment, and although his execution generally was highly respectable, his vociferating powers were too little restrained to delineate with truth the outraged feelings, and heart-rending suguish of the injured, affectionate and dignified Roman Father.

Mr. Porter's universally stiff and measure of utterance did not do full justice to the nicer passion of the brave yet love-sick Icilius, and we regret that a performer, otherwise so pleasing, should so often deviate from truth and nature to manifest to the painfully convinced auditor the IRELAND .- In the Cork Southern Reporter, it is said, that " a family consisting of five persons, having no means of getting a morsel to eat, locked themselves up in a room, determined to suffer under the pangs il lunger sooner than go out to beg-one of them a young girl, not able to endure ith the rest, rushed into the street, and form a stand snatched a piece of raw bacon, which she eat greedily before the owner. The house was searched, and four of the family were found to have perished."

ALI PACHA .- The Paris papers assert, that that chief, who has been killed and raised again-by the pen-about a hundred times, instead of being beheaded, as had been confidently stated, had contrived to clude the danger which threatened him, by decorating an old soldier with a magnificent turban, who was decapitated in mis-take for Ali. The Pacha is stated to have escaped to Mahon.

Steam Bost Law.—It is reported, and probably not without foundation, that the Legislature of Connecticut has passed the law prohibiting the New York Futton Company steam boats from entering the waters within the jurisdiction of that state, the objections of Gov. Another Pidgeon Stary.—The Chatauque Censor informs us that an innumerable host of pidgeons commenced building their nests 5 miles from that village, and have extended them thirty miles in a range of three miles in width. It is impossible, says the editor of the Censor, to make any thing like a correct calculation of the number within those bounds, as every tree is literally covered with their nests. They hatch several times in a season, and one brood has already come off, and as they fly very low while young, it is said 200 dozen have been killed in a day, by knocking them down with poles.

The Albion, whose loss at Garretstown bay we first mentioned in our paper of Tuesday, was one of the finest class of ships between Liverpool and New-York, and was 500 tons burthen. We have since learned some further particulars, by which it appears that her loss was attended with circumstance of a peculiarly afflicting nature. She had lived out the tremendous gale, of the entire day on Sunday, and Capt. Williams consoled his passengers, at 8 o'elock in the evening, with the hope of being able to reach Liverpool on the day but one after, which cheering expectation induced almost all the passengers, particularly the females, to retire to rest. In some short time, however, the violant squall came on, which, in a moment, carried away the masts, and there being no possibility of disengaging them from the rigging, they so encumbered the hull that she became unmanageable, and drifted at the mercy of the waves, till the Light House at the Old Head was discovered, the wreck still nearing in, when the captain told the aad news to the passengers that there was no longer any hope, and soon after she atruck. From thence forward all was distress and confusion. The vessel soon went to pieces, and of the crew and passengers, only six of the former and one of the latter were saved.

The mate is among the preserved, and that preservation was almost miraculous. He was thrown TIVOLI THEATRE.

The number of passengers, we believe, was 25. Of these, as we have already stated, one only was asseed, a gentleman of Boston, who trailed with Legepool. He had arrived at New-York almost as the Albion was on the point of sailing, and had not time to get bills for a large sum in specie which he had. It was therefore abipped and lost.

Beveral of the bodies have been washed ashore, and Jacob Mark, Eaq the American consul at this port, having repaired to the scene where the wreck took place, immediately on learning the melancholy intelligence, has done every thing befling his attuition and a man of humanity under the circumstances. He has provided coffus for the bodies, and caused them to be interred with their respective names affixed, having first had the mate to point them out, in order that, if the families of any of them should wish hereafter to have the bodies removed, they may be enabled to do so. Mr. Mark's conduct is in every respect most praiseworthy, and be hus taken measures for the protection of very thing that has been washed ashore, as well as for accuring any thing that may yet be recovered. Among the property siready found is a box of apocie; and among the hodies washed ashore is that of the French lady; she was extremely beautiful; when first discovered by some respectable persons it was entirely naked. It is mantimed, to us as a fact, which we think ought to be wentioned, that a country boy, who saw the body, took off his outside coat and covered it; and it is related of the country people, that they also task of their warm clothing and put them on the unfortunate and half perished part of the crew that escaped. While there are so muy to censure and condemn their crimes, let them at least, have justice rendered to their good qualities.

A great number of bills drawn by the British officers to America, on Greenwood & Cox. army agents in London, and on other persons in England, have been also washed ashore. Mr. Mrk's activity and vigilance have been successful in securing whetever has been succes

The bills found are to an immense amount, on London, Paris, and different parts of the continent. Mr. Mark speaks in terms of great praise of the exections of Mr. Pratt, surveyor of Kinsule, and of Mr. Purcell, a confidential steward of Mr. Rochfort.

A deplorable event took place in the neighbour-boad of Dectors' Commons, on Tuesday last. A young Lady, who had only been a fortnight marri-ed, being informed by her husband, that business of consequence would keep him out all night, was so affected by jealousy, that she retired to her chamber, and was found, yesterday morning, hang-ing from the bedstead quite dead. Surgical aid was procured, but to no avail.

A Liverpool paper of the 27th, of April, states, that a melancholy catastrophe occurred on heard the Lord Suffield, during her voyage from South America to Gibraltar. Among the passengers was the well known Spanish General Offeelly, whose spirits seemed completely broken by disasters and misfortunes. He was treated during the time he was on heard, with uniforth attention, and every misfortunes. He was treated during the time he was on board, with uniform attention, and every effort made to withdraw his mind from those gloomy meditations in which he indulged. All, however, was vain. On the 23d January, in a fit of frantic despondency, he threw himself overboard, and, although every attempt was made to save him, he perished.

A letter from Paris, in noticing the embassy to Morocco, states, " that circumstances had transpired, to induce a beilef that the Divan, having long decided on resisting the demands of Russia, had been extremely active in secretly rousing the African tributaries of the empire, to a sense of the imminent danger with which the followers of the Koran are now threatened. The policy of Turkey, as it might seem, had been to lose no time in preparing for the encounter, which it was her determination to provoke, and in spite of the pacific hopes that might by some be cherished, we can see no indication but that of war."

DANTE

As this great Poet was passing St. Peter's Gate, in Florence, he heard a Blacksmith singing his verses as he worked at his anvit, and miscrably transforming and mongling them. Unite walked into the shop, and without saying any thing began to theme the man's tools into the street. The omith to throw the man's tools into the street. The smith starting up with a menacing gesture, asked him if he were mad, or what was he about. "I may rather ask what are you about," rejoined the poet. "I am minding my business," said the man, " and 'I wish you wruld do the same, and not spoil my tools in the way you are doing." "Well," said Dante, "if you will not spoil my things, I will not spoil yours." What things of yours have I spoiled?" asked the man, "My verses," replied the Poet—"you were singing out of my book, and did not sing it as I wrote it." The man, astonished, made no reply, but picking up his tools resumed his work, and fur the time to come left off Dante.

LL D.

The scarce ever see the abbreviation of Dector of Lour written correctly. Almost uniformly a period is placed after each letter, whereas the sense plainly shows that it should only be after the seemed L. Many are ignorant of, and have made many suppositions concerning, the meaning of two L'a. For general information on this important subject, we state, that the L is doubled because the word it signifies is plural, in the same manner as MS stands for manuscript, MSS, for manuscripts. So that when in the typography the L'a are separated by a period, it is extremely erroneous, as in that case it would lead us to suppose, that the title indicated two different aria, as acceral have supposed it to mean Becture of Lauraing and Laure.

A few years since, at Brighton, Sir John ande, for a trifling wager, undertook to carry Lord Cholmondeley, on his b-ch, from opposite the Pavillion, twice round the Steine. Several ladies attended to be spectators of this extraordinary feat of the dwarf carrying a giant. When his lordship declared himself ready, Sir John desired him to arrip: "Strip," exclaimed the other, "Why surely you manufact to carry me in my clottes!"—"By no d himes:
"Strip," exclaimed the other, "viviv and By no promised to carry me in my clothes!"—" By no means," replied the baronet: "I engaged to carry the strip you, but not an inch of clothes; so, therefore, my lord, make ready, and let us not disappoint the public." After much srughable altercation, it was at length decided that Sir John had won his wa-ger, the peer declining to exhibit!

Encouragement to Printers.

When the life Mr. Holt first established a news paper in New York, one of his earliest subscribers happened to be a person from the vicinity of Albany, who was rich, but of a narrow, penurious disposition. In the course of the first year the printer sent him the account of the yearly subscription, requesting it might be discharged by the first opportunity. No answer, however, came; and things ran on in the same manner for the term of eighteen sears. At the conclusion of this time Mr. Holt, as years. At the conclusion of this time Mr. Holt, as may well be supposed, being out of all patience with his customer, had the whole account made out and sent to him, adding at the foot thereof if he would not pay, he would discontinue sending any more newspapers. The subscriber, having read over the account when presented, exclaimed, " If has an unger teful man I have to do with! I was one of the very first that encourage d his paper by sub-ecribing, and this is the return he makes me!

BALM OF COLUMBIA, important recent Chemical discovery

THE ladies and gentlemen of this city and else where, are respectfully informed, that John dridge has fortunately discovered, by the powe A where, are respectually informed, that John Oldridge has fortunately discovered, by the power of chemistry, the grand desideratum of preventing Hair from falling off in FORTY-EIGHT HOURS. This balm will most absolutely, in the course of a short time, make the Hair grow healthy and thick. J. O. is well aware that many fraudulent and impositious Oils, &c. have been imposed on the public, and therefore prejudice will be severe against his discovery, until trial shall convince his patrons that such a thing exists in nature as a certain preventative against the loss of hair. This valuable balm will cause whiskers and beards to grow rapidly. No danger need he apprehended to the human system by the application of this capillary restorative. The public may rest assured that it helps nature, and is perfectly harmless.

Persons desirous of becoming agents for the sale of the Balm of Columbia, will please address the proprietor by letter, (post paid,) with a suitable reference.

generally come to a good market, and many of them actually made their fortunes. In fact, it has become famous as a depot of trade, where investments are almust sure to produce a handsome profit—so much so, indeed, that the opinion strongly prevails, that fortune has marked it for her own if such be the fact, then all doubts must vanish.
It must be the successful port of entry.—The proprietor, therefore, most earnestly solicies those pockets well with specie or its representative, and set immediate sail for Port Gibbs. The presenfair winds will bring the skilful sons of old Neptune, in a few hours, to anchor at this famous port of good luck, where hundreds of valuable cargoes are now for sale, at the lowest prices, to those who first apply. The proprietor also trades in Foreign Gold, Spanish Dollars, &c.
